

Commissary Kitchens

If your production has outgrown your home kitchen, or you would like to produce something for which you need a commercial kitchen, here is some guiding information.

What is a Commissary Kitchen: A commissary is a commercial kitchen that rents space in their registered facility to other food service providers. They are often used by Caterers to prepare food, but can be used by any food business that needs access to a commercial kitchen without buying or renting an entire facility.

Do I need to use one: It depends on the product you are making, where you want to sell it, and how much you are selling.

- If it is an item not approved for production in a cottage kitchen, then this is a good option.
- If you are looking to sell at farmers markets and other stores it may help to use a commissary kitchen, but Class B Cottage kitchen laws may also work depending on the organization.
- If you are making over $50,000 in revenue per year you are no longer eligible for the cottage kitchen laws.
- It may also be time to move to a commissary if your spouse is tired of fresh baked pies and other treats in the house!

What if there are none available near me?: If you can't find a commissary kitchen with space close by, you can always talk to friends or local food businesses that have a commercial food license, and ask to use their extra space when available. Many Bakeries, Caterers, and Restaurants have extra space, and may be willing to rent it out on a case by case basis. This mostly requires them to fill out a form as a "Commissary," and they may assume some of the food safety risk. You can also contact the Office of Environmental Health Services for this and other questions.
